CollegeSurfing.com Showcases “Fun” and Lucrative Careers

CollegeSurfing.com Interviews Professionals in Alternative and Glamorous Fields to Provide Insight into Lesser-Known Occupations

Staten Island, NY, July 12, 2007 – Joining the "real world" ranks doesn't have to be a bore. CollegeSurfing.com has interviewed various individuals and highlighted their paths to successful -- and fun -- careers. "Your career choice doesn't have to necessarily go the traditional route of doctor, lawyer, or teacher," says Dawn Papandrea, managing editor at The CollegeBound Network. "There are many different paths vocations you can choose, based on your unique interests and talents."

Check out how some of these unusual and unique careers that have brought success to others:

- Celebrity Dog Trainer - Tyson Kilmer always loved working with animals, but he didn't realize that he'd make a career out of his passion when he was young. After modeling for some time, he managed to begin his animal career and now trains the dogs of celebrities, including Mike Tyson, Sheryl Crow, and Joni Mitchell, among others.
- Computer Animator - Brad Schiff didn't know what he wanted to do when he began college. After realizing he really liked art, he transferred to NYU and worked on Tim Burton's animated motion picture, "The Corpse Bride." He went from a 2.0 to a 4.0 GPA, once he found something he really loved to do.
- Cosmetologist - Elise Brill took her love of cosmetics to the next level and has worked in many different aspects of make-up and beautifying others. She is now her own boss, as she began her own entrepreneurial venture for making up brides.
- Pro Sports Trainer - Kevin Johnson realized after getting hurt in college that there wasn't a specific person at his school who could help him with his rehab. He went on to study physical education and he now works with the pros, as the head athletic trainer for the Philadelphia 76ers.
